Lafayette Master Plan Talks

Posted: Apr 03, 2012 5:38 PM CDT

If you take a look around the United States, you'll find that in many cases the most successful cities are those who have a plan, or a vision, for the future growth of their community. Lafayette is one of those cities.

It's hard to picture Lafayette 20 years from now but with your help and input that vision may just become reality.

City Parish President Joey Durel signed a 1.2 million dollar contract with a planning firm who will be responsible for helping the city chart its own future. It sounds easy, but it isn't.

"I pushed and pushed and pushed for this and that was the easy part" says Durel.

With the easy part behind them, it's now time for those consultants to reach out, to get your input on how you want to shape Lafayette Parish and they are doing this through a series of meetings.

"We want your input of what you want for your children and your grandchildren 10, 20, 30 years from now" says Durel.

Once the consultants know exactly what you want, they will map it out and present it to the administration.

"This has to be the peoples plan if it's not it will be a waste of money" says Durel.

It's your city, and your future, so voice your ideas. The first public meeting will be held Monday April 16th at 6 pm at the South Regional Library. This is your chance to have a real say in the future course of your community. So, needless to say, you're encouraged to show up and make your voice heard.
